Qualifications Profile:

An outgoing, hardworking and concentrated professional seeking to coordinate with others. Possess the ability to get along with various people from different backgrounds and poised to history long before and are willing to study history, especially historical theory and historiography. As a student from Asia and the global history department, I am able to have a different but not rigid perspective toward historical events.

Organizational and dialectical-thinking ability

In most of my courses, book reports and essays are necessary. Normally, when I commit to my workload, rather than fixing my eyes on only one book and single area, I always find all the books of the author and various works about the topic, which I believe is more meaningful and well-rounded.

Researching and using databases

When helping my tutor to do her project and reading material, I can use various databases like JSTOR, CALIS, GALE, and ProQuest with a great deal of skill.

Screening and distinguishing ability

As a student in the history department, not only do I need to find material, but also need to revise and rearrange them objectively.

Teaching ability

During my college years, I have become an English and History tutor for senior high school students. From them, I feel fresh and invigorated as well. From these experiences, I understand what my value and responsibilities are.
